The healthcare giant's new office will serve as the template for future company offices

As part of a large healthcare recruitment organisation, the office caters to the needs of staff and visitors. Spread across two floors, the fifth-floor 26,041 sq ft space invites visitors into an interconnected office.

Upon arrival, guests will arrive into a lobby with a custom built-in art display, coffee bar and built-in banquette area. The polished tile flooring and wood veneer wall project an atmosphere of quality and sophistication.

As a recruiter, priority was placed upon creating intimate interview spaces. Using "L" shaped booths, and hidden by frosted glass, the design is intended to make interviewees feel safe, private, but not confined within the space.

With 363 workstations situated near each other, the office is highly interconnected and encourages collaborative work. There are also several huddle rooms that can be used for private work or for employees to try a change of scenery.

These breakout rooms are intermixed throughout the office to ensure that all have quick and easy access to one when needed. The rooms vary in contents with bar height tables, coffee bars and lounge areas.

In addition, there are break rooms with light lunch and snack options available as well as restaurant style booths that help separate work from breaks.

On the first floor, Soliant Health has a 32,693 sq ft space for its internal staff and for training purposes. Featuring a vibrant colour palette, each of the workstations is positioned to be near natural light to better encourage health and happiness within the teams.

Across both floors, the office uses the signature colour scheme of Soliant Health. Pink and teal are the prime focus, with a distinct effort made to avoid the placement of posters and allowing the colours to flow freely.

Within the office there are shovels prominently displayed. These serve as a symbol of growth and are part of the internal awards process.
